“Being different – the modern generalist and their role in medicine ”

Professor Amanda Howe practises as a GP at the Bowthorpe Medical Centre in Norwich, England and has been Professor of Primary Care at the University of East Anglia since 2001.

She was elected RCGP Chair of Research 2000-2005, was RCGP Honorary Secretary 2009-2013, and is currently RCGP Vice Chair for Professional Development.

She says “I wanted to be a GP when I was a medical student, despite influences from tutors to do otherwise. I’m fascinated by the role that the GP consultation can play in helping patients make sense of their lives, and overcome physical and mental adversity. ” She is also President Elect of the World Organization of Family Doctors, which exists to improve the quality of life of the peoples of the world by fostering high standards of care in general practice/family medicine.
